The opportunity

This new class-based session uses images and artefacts to explore the lives of two young children as they journey between the UK and Senegal.

It offers a rare opportunity to engage directly with real-life stories and bring intercultural understanding to life through a series of carefully selected activities. The interactive and participatory nature of the day builds on the responses of learners and supports the development of curiosity, speaking and listening, and critical thinking skills.

The day

The specific aims of the day are to:

- ✓ consider identity in relation to place;
- ✓ explore feelings and emotions associated with travelling to an unfamiliar place;
- ✓ look at the geographical location and colonial history of Senegal – languages, French influence, etc;
- ✓ explore daily life in Ziguinchor and Dakar, using images and artefacts;
- ✓ consider the future for people in Ziguinchor and Dakar and for the two young children.

The day includes full pre- and post- support to the teaching staff involved, with ideas to follow up the day, links to other opportunities, and free advice on intercultural and global learning.

The facilitator

Lifeworlds Practitioner Jackie Zammit is an experienced educator who has developed many learning opportunities for both pupils and staff. She has first-hand knowledge of Senegal and is well-respected in the field of global and intercultural learning.

Jackie brings a unique insight and richness to this opportunity that is sure to make it a day for all to remember.

The deal

Me in my place, my place in me - Senegal is offered to schools as a full package for £385.00* and can be delivered to up to 60 pupils across key stages 1 and 2.
